Four triumph in diving meet

Heidi Schmitz, Tim Buehler, Lara Jefferson, and Jeff Cohen secured victories in the first day of the two-day All-City Diving Meet at Parkcrest Pool on Madison's West Side.

Schmitz and Buehler won the girls' and boys' divisions, respectively, in the 10-years-old and under class, while Jefferson and Cohen took their respective titles in the 11-12 girls' and boys' classes.

Competitors aged 10 and under were required to perform an inward dive, and choose four others from a list including a double somersault, a full twisting somersault, a back reverse, and several inward options.

The second phase of the meet, the 13-14 and 15-18 divisions, will be today.

Thomas puts Brewers on top

Moose Haas

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Gorman Thomas was paid the highest of baseball compliments Tuesday night — and it made him mad. Thomas clubbed two home runs in his first three at-bats in Milwaukee's 8-2 victory over the Texas Rangers. His fourth time up, reliever Dan Boitano, a former Brewer, plunked him on the left arm with a fastball — a baseball warning to a hot hitter, as well as a sign of respect. Thomas almost lost his temper over the incident. "That's your first reaction, sure, to get mad, but that's life in the big leagues," said Thomas "I don't exactly know if I would call it a compliment. But if he did it on purpose or not, it really doesn't bother me in the least."

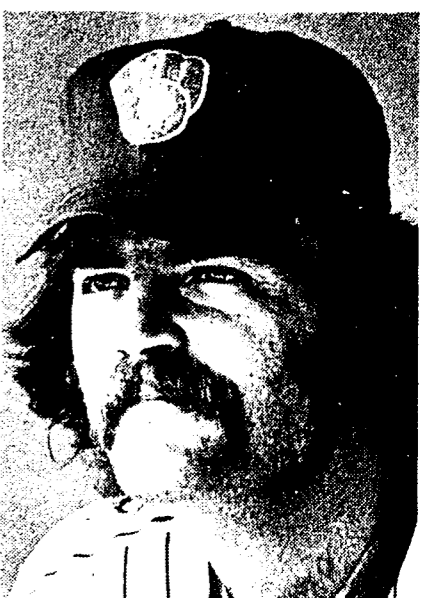

Thomas' two homers drove in five runs as the Brewers climbed back into first place in the American League East Division, a half-game ahead of the Boston Red Sox, who had supplanted them one night earlier. The Red Sox lost to Toronto, 3-1, Tuesday. Milwaukee's Moose Haas (8-5) gave up seven hits, walking none and struck out two in seven strong innings during his fourth straight victory. Peter Ladd and Rollie Fingers completed a nine-hitter. "Moose pitched great," said Manager Harvey Kuenn. "He didn't walk anybody, he was throwing hard, he had a good slider — he pitched excellent."

Milwaukee took a 3-1 lead in the fourth inning when Robin Yount walked, Cecil Cooper singled and Thomas homered. Thomas made it 5-1 in the sixth with a homer to straightaway center field after a single by Ted Simmons. It was Thomas' 25th homer and gave him the league lead. Simmons' two-run double in the seventh gave Milwaukee a 7-1 and Yount accounted for the Brewers' final run and extended his nine-game hitting streak with an RBI single in the ninth. Loser Rick Honeycutt (4-12) yielded seven runs and 10 hits in seven innings. The Rangers' first run came in the first inning on singles by Billy Sample and Lee Mazzilli and Buddy Bell's grounder. Bell singled home the other Texas run in the eighth against Ladd. The Brewers conclude the Texas series and a nine-game trip tonight at 7:30 p.m. Frank Tanana (5-10) pitches for the Rangers against Milwaukee's Bob McClure (7-3). The game will be televised on Cable Ch. 22 in Madison. The Brewers, who are 3-5 on the trip, return home Thursday to face Cleveland in the first game of a five-game series, which concludes with a double-header Sunday.

As usual, Starr exudes optimism

GREEN BAY (AP) — Bart Starr, who almost surely will need a winning record this year to keep his job, exudes unprecedented optimism as he prepares for his eighth season as coach of the Green Bay Packers. Starr's seven-year record with the Packers is 39-65-2, worst ever for any coach after that long with one National Football League club. But there are several indications this may be the strongest Packer team since Turn to Page 4, Col. 2

Beating the bushes: Life in the minors

APPLETON — They play a double-header this night in Wisconsin Rapids and so, at 2 p.m., the Appleton Foxes begin wandering into their locker room. They change into their uniforms and collect their spikes and gloves, and they move toward the chartered bus for the two-hour journey. Some carry coolers filled with food and drink so they can save the $5.50 meal money they receive, and right fielder Leo Garcia lugs a bag filled with bats. It is the outfielders' turn to be sure they're aboard. He shoves them into the bus' belly and then walks to its door, where he greets catcher Donn Koch, who's munching a bologna sandwich. They depart at 2:30 sharp, and soon they settle into routines perfected in the past. Adrian Garrett, the manager, sits front row right with his 10-year-old son Jason, who falls asleep on his father's lap. Garcia reads a pocket Bible, third baseman Wade Rowdon reads a hardbound book, designated hitter Chuck Eflerson reads a newspaper, and Koch, shortstop Ramon Romero and pitcher Mike Tanzi compete in countless games of computer baseball. Left fielder Mike Buggs and center fielder Daryl Boston envelope themselves in earphones and music, a quartet of others plays Spades, and the rest simply sleep or stare blankly out the windows. They are a band of strangers bound together by common pursuit, neophytes learning their crafts and paying dues as members of the Chicago White Sox Class A franchise. They are just like the players which make up the roster of their chief foe concludes catcher Scott Meier. "They say you gotta love it. Well, we do." A balky radiator recently stretched a 5 1/2-hour trip to Clinton into a nine-hour tragi-comedy (they were rained out that night as well), but this journey unfolds without incident and some players start associating words and images with cities in the league. Springfield and Cedar Rapids are summarized as class acts, Madison is remembered for its boisterous fans, and when Burlington is brought up, Tanzi laughs and says simply: "Where's Burlington?" Danville? Chinese restaurant, the only one in a radius of 25 miles. Chinese food for breakfast, lunch and dinner. The theme song from "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest" playing over the hotel's muzak system all night long. Walking through mud to get to the lockerroom, and inhaling odors that smelled as if they belonged in a barnyard. No foul lines and in their place, says Tanzi, "trenches that looked like gutters in a bowling alley." Quad-Cities? The Fort Coconut Grove, they called their hotel, which was so bad Garrett has refused to stay there again. Padlocks on the doors. Venetian blinds that fell when adjusted. Blood in the building's courtyard. "Ever been to the old section of Miami Beach?" says Rowdon. "It's like that. Had its heyday when the gangsters were around." Clinton? in the Northern Division of the Midwest League — the Madison Muskies. On the average, only four of them will enjoy even a cup of coffee in the majors, yet that thought and those intolerable odds prevent none of them from sharing the vision of Buggs, who sees himself frolicking across a lush field every time he watches TV's "Game Of The Week." While they scramble toward a distant reality, they operate somewhere between here and Clinton, Iowa, playing a 144-game season with only two days off. They endure not only draining bus rides (the longest is 345 miles from Springfield, Ill., to Appleton), but also loneliness and poverty, poor playing conditions and psychological pressures. "It's a gamble, a long shot deal, and you can drive yourself nuts trying to figure out what's going to happen to you," says Tanzi. "You have to stay zeroed in on your purpose for being here," adds Rowdon. "It's certainly not glamorous. It's certainly not for the money. (The players receive between $650 and $900 per month.) It's easy to get depressed. It's easy to wonder what you're doing here." "You hear a lot of guys say, 'Heck, what am I doing here? I could be back home making more money and living normally,'"

As usual, Starr is optimistic

the club last made the playoffs in 1972 under Dan Devine.

"I'm personally optimistic about our chances this year," said Starr, who will greet rookies and free agents at St. Norbert College today. Veterans will report Friday.

"There's an awareness here that we can win," Starr said. "Our people realize that they not only can be competitive with the best people in the league, but that they can beat them."

Starr was given a new two-year contract last December, but Packer President Robert J. Parins made it clear at the time he would not hesitate to change coaches after this season if real progress is not made. It is believed Parins will settle for nothing less than a winning record and a playoff berth.

Starr's optimism is rooted in several factors:

✓ Last year's 8-8 record, which included a 6-2 finish.

✓ Possibly the best tandem of wide receivers in the NFL in James Lofton and John Jefferson, complemented by tight end Paul Coffman.

✓ A re-tooled offensive scheme — designed to maximize the talents of Lofton and Jefferson — directed by Bob Schnelker, the new offensive coordinator.

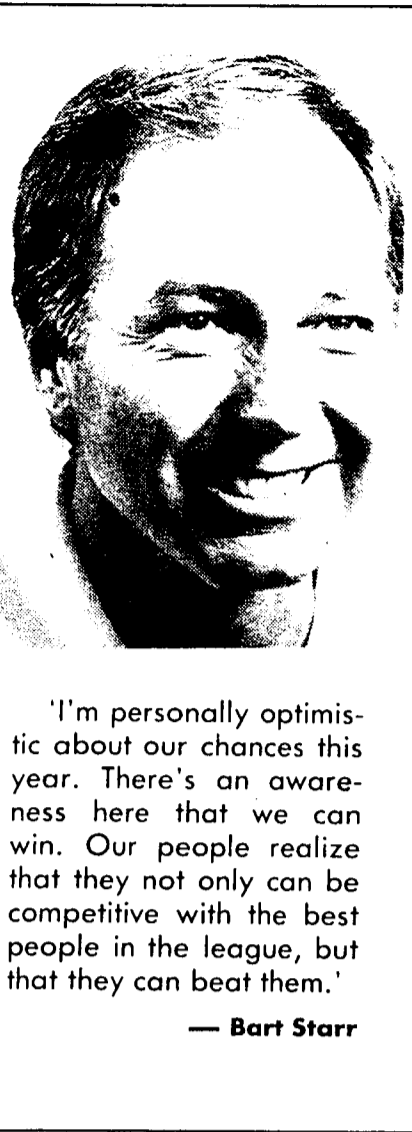

The hiring of Schnelker, previously a Packer assistant coach from 1966-71, may be Starr's most significant move of the offseason. Schnelker is widely respected around the NFL for his innovative thinking, and is credited with excellent work in his most recent job, offensive coordinator of the Detroit Lions.

"My philosophy is that I'm going to attack the defense we're playing," Schnelker said. "Other people may put in an offense and say, 'OK, you stop that offense.' The Chargers are a typical example. Everybody in the world knows what they're going to do. They dare you to stop them."

"I think my philosophy is more to see what is their (opponents') pattern of defense," he said. "Then I'm going to sort of reconstruct the offense to beat that defense."

Schnelker said the Packers will have a more wide open offense "in some phases."

"A lot will depend on what the

Bart Starr thinks James Lofton (80) and John Jefferson will have a lot of happy times during upcoming season. —AP Laserphoto team is made up of," he said. "If Eddie Lee Ivery is healthy — a great running back — it's going to be more of a balanced attack."

"But we've got to anticipate that we're going to throw the ball more because of the personnel we have," he said.

No one questions the potential of the Packers' passing game, but improved pass protection is a top priority. The Packers allowed 52 sacks, second most in the NFL, last season.

Ron Hallstrom, the team's top draft choice, will get every chance to displace Leotis Harris as the starting right guard, although Harris is listed as first string on the current depth chart.

"I'm personally optimistic about our chances this year. There's an awareness here that we can win. Our people realize that they not only can be competitive with the best people in the league, but that they can beat them."

No title for Whitehouse

The Whitehouse Tavern women's softball team did not clinch the Georgia League fast-pitch title as The State Journal reported Tuesday due to incorrect information.

Whitehouse did nail down the second-half crown, but a number of rainouts remain before a league champion is determined. The State Journal regrets the error.

Anthony shoots 78 in public links golf

BELLOIT — Nancy Anthony of Madison shot a second consecutive 78 Tuesday for fifth place in the Wisconsin Women's Public Links Golf Association Tournament at Krueger Municipal Golf Course.

University of Wisconsin golfer Barb Casper of Fond du Lac fired a 74 to move into the lead with Patty Deglow, also of Fond du Lac, at 152. Deglow combined rounds of 76-76, while Casper opened with a 78 Monday.

Diane Lindstrom of Madison is tied for sixth going into today's final round with a 157 total on rounds of 77-80. Also in contention for the title are Lisa Kartheiser of Milwaukee at 153 and Peggy Pfaff of Beloit at 154.

Madison scores 154 — Nancy Anthony, 78-78; 157 — Diane Lindstrom, 77-80; 167 — JoAnn Walker, 85-82; 168 — Marge Olson, 86-82; 171 — Becky Rieper, 85-86; 176 — Alice Dillman, 89-87; 180 — Char Schachte, 91-89; 181 — Pat Broder, 92-89; 185 — Sandy Weitzer, 98-87; Carol Greig, 90-85; Cindy Stewart, 96-90; 189 — Sue Jay Sobala, 95-94; 190 — Jackie Michaels, 97-93; 191 — Gloria Terragnoli, 94-97; 194 — Martha Brown, 99-95; 194 — Lorraine Grant, 99-97; 194 — Ruth Bartlett, 99-99; 199 — Marge Weyer, 100-99; 201 — Ardeli Dahl, 102-99; 211 — Geri Wasson, 112-99; 217 — Sally Troutman, 105-112.

you a ghost still lives and terrorizes women by locking them in the bathroom. A hole in the outfield fence, and a ground-rule double if you hit a ball through it. Mosquitoes so big Garrett nicknamed them "74s" and so dense the players used bug spray every three innings. "At the end of a night, your calves are twice their normal size from the bites," says Buggs.

"I see you," says Boston, assuming the role of a mosquito. "Gonna get me some blood."

Wisconsin Rapids? A gust of wind blowing down three panels of the outfield fence in the 14th inning of a game there. Relief pitchers holding them up as play continues.

There is no wind when the bus arrives at Wisconsin Rapids' Witter Field, but when the Foxes try their locker room door, they find it locked. They spread themselves about in casual disarray as the key is fetched, and when they finally gain entrance, a dozen of them line up to use the room's one toilet. "Another bomb shelter built when Kennedy was president," chortles Rowdon, accurately describing the surroundings even though his history is wrong.

Outside, half of one advertisement on the outfield fence is missing, replaced by a plain green plank, and another, for a plumbing and heating company, is in upside down. ("Probably didn't pay his bill," says Garrett, laughing.) The team's dugout is too small to comfortably accommodate all its players, and the bat rack is an orange steel drum that has been used to ship sodium hydrosulfite. Although it's quarter beer night, only 46 people are in the stands when the National Anthem is played and infield chatter is clearly audible, as well as squeals from a nearby girl's softball game.

In the opener, Wisconsin Rapids scores three runs in the first inning, four in the second, and 12 in the third, which ends with Appleton first baseman Pat Adams on the mound. "There is another game after this and five more in the next three days, so a pitcher is not wasted on a lost cause. When it ends four innings later (each game of a double-header is seven innings), some players remain on the field, others wander into the stands, and a handful buy themselves hot dogs or hamburgers.

Two hours and a victory later, their work is complete and they clamor aboard their bus. "They grab cans from the cases of beer setting on the front seats and they indulge in song, jumping effortlessly from Elvis' "Hound Dog," to Kenny Rogers' "The Gambler," to Mac Davis' "Oh, Lord, It's Hard To Be Humble When You're Perfect In Every Way."

Garrett, the 39-year old manager who played 12 years in the minors, sees it all. "Every one of these guys wants to move up, and in order to do that, they have to statistically do a good job," he says. "That puts pressure on them and my most important job is to keep it off, to keep them relaxed."

"You have to be mentally tough," adds Wade Rowdon. "When you play in college, it's something of a job, but now you have to produce or you're not worth anything to the organization. The competition is the same as anywhere, you just have to realize you're a commodity. That's the biggest adjustment, realizing it is a job and that you are therefore expendable anytime they wish."

"You're a piece of property, and the hardest part is not knowing what you'll do tomorrow," Mike Tanzi goes on. "You can go up, go down, be released. I could get home tonight and find out they want me in Sarasota tomorrow. You're never really settled during a season, you can't sit back and say, 'Hey, this is my home.' It's not true."

"It's also not as much of a team sport at this level. In college, it's fun. Here, everyone is after your job and there's competitiveness within the team. In college, you competed against other teams. Here, you compete against other teams and against people crawling up your back to get your job. That rah-rah team spirit that was always preached to you, you don't get that anymore."

"That's right," concludes pitcher Jesse Anderson. "Down here, you've got to fight like a dog to survive."
