Jacobsen wins Hartford Open

Associated Press

Peter Jacobsen faltered briefly Sunday but held on to his narrow lead and won the Sammy Davis Jr. Greater Hartford Open in Cromwell, Conn., by two strokes.

On the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, rookie Juli Inkster shrugged off her 3-over-par 75 on Saturday to close with a sparkling 67 and earn a 1-stroke victory over a Ayako Okamoto in the du Maurier Classic tournament in Toronto.

In Castle Rock, Colo., Miller Barber ran off five birdies to pull away from the field and coast to a 3-stroke victory in the Denver Post Champions of Golf seniors tournament.

In the regular PGA event, Jacobsen, 30, shot a 1-under-par 70 to edge his playing partner, Mark O'Meara, and win the $72,000 top prize.

Both Jacobsen and O'Meara had shot course-record 63s in Saturday's third round on the par-71, 6,800-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut course.

It was the second PGA victory of the season for Jacobsen who won the Colonial-NIT in May.

Jacobsen's four-round total of 269 was four strokes ahead of third-place finishers Gary Hallberg and Bill Kratzert, and seven better than fourth-place George Burns and Curtis Strange. Madison's Andy North finished 18 shots back at 287.

The LPGA victory provided Inkster with her second tour victory and second major championship of the season. She also became the first rookie in LPGA history to win two majors and the first golfer to perform the feat since Sandra Haynie captured two in 1974.

Inkster finished with a 279 total, 9 under par at the 6,131-yard par-72 St. George's Golf and Country Club. Okamoto, who started the day three shots back of thirdround leader Betsy King, carded a 66 - the low round of the tournament - and finished at 280.

On the PGA Senior Tour, Barber won for the fourth time in the last six tour tournaments, and the $30,000 firstplace prize solidified his position as the senior tour's second-leading money winner with $199,629, behind Don January's $207,635.

- Porter claims GMTA title

By Scot Petersen State Journal sports reporter

The tennis gods might have been favoring Bob Porter Sunday in the Greater Madison Tennis Association Closed Tournament.

"I was lucky," Porter said after his opponent in the finals, Tim Blissing, retired in the third set after sustaining leg and hand cramps and a twisted ankle to allow Porter to win the men's open singles championship at Nielsen Tennis Stadium.

Porter didn't win just on luck, though. He outlasted scrappy 16-yearold Craig Gundersen, 6-4, 6-4, in the semifinals, and came back in the finals after losing the first set, 6-2.

route to taking the set, 6-2. Porter then toughened up while Blissing was forced to take several breaks to shake off his cramps, and Porter had little trouble taking the set, 6-0. Porter had a 4-1 lead when Blissing decided to hang it up. He was also forced to withdraw from the doubles finals, giving the victory to Gundersen and Tim Wilcox.

"I had a lot of energy," Porter said. "IIe (Blissing) played great, he is a great volleyer. I guess I'm just lucky."

Which is exactly what Porter, a certified public accountant, said about his match with Gundersen, a serve-and-vollever who figures to ning three of the first four games en someday.

The Western Senior Men's Hardcourt Championships also concluded Sunday at the John Powless Tennis Center, as Madison's Jim Jefferies beat Frank Juhasz of Glendale for the 45-and-over singles title.

Jefferies, who beat Juhasz in the finals last year in a third-set tiebreaker, won Sunday's rematch in easier fashion, 6-4, 6-2.

"I could see it in his eyes that he wouldn't last long," Porter said of Blissing, "I knew he wouldn't last, I thought he was going to retire after the turn at the third set."

Sunday's final was Blissing's third match of the day. Immediately after he won his semifinal singles match over Dave Irwin, 6-4, 6-1, he joined partner Bob Lange on the doubles court for a semifinal match, beating Bob Hummer and Rich Simonson in three sets.

Then, after about an hour's rest, Blissing was back on the court with Porter.

Blissing started out strong, win-play No. 1 singles at Madison Memorial High School next year.

Gundersen did not give up after losing the first set and dropping the first game of the second set. After Porter took a 3-2 lead, Gundersen won two consecutive games to take a 4-3 lead. Porter quickly struck back to win the final two games, taking advantage of some unforced errors by Gundersen.

"He (Porter) deserved to win, he played good," Gundersen said. "I just have to learn to be more patient." With that, and a little luck, he just

Earnhardt wins Talladega 500

TALLADEGA, Ala., (AP) – Dale Earnhardt was confident heading toward the finish line, knowing he had the Talladega 500 well in hand.

"I was waving at the crowd," he said after taking the checkered flag Sunday for his first NASCAR Grand National victory of the year.

Earnhardt barreled ahead on the backstretch of the final lap and finished 1.66 seconds ahead of Buddy Baker to pick up $47,100. His average speed for the 500 miles was 155.585 mph.

Track officials first announced Terry Labonte finished second, but pictures taken of his car and Baker's show that Baker edged him for the No. 2 spot.

Earnhardt was the 12th winner in 19 NASCAR events so far this year, a record. Sixty-eight lead changes among 16 drivers took place during the race, which was viewed by a crowd estimated by the Alabama Highway Patrol at 94,000.

Olympian names are a uniform problem

©Knight-Ridder News Service

INGLEWOOD, Calif. -- The names may be familiar but the fans can't place the uniforms

Uwe Blab? Detlef Schrempf? Christian Welp? Seems they play someplace in the USA, but why are they in the uniforms of West Germany?

Bill Wennington? Dan Meagher? Their names are familiar, too. But playing for the Canadians?

The Americanization of international basketball has never been more evident than at the Olympic competition here this week at the Forum. More and more, the best young foreign players are coming to the United States - birthplace of the sport - to improve their fundamental skills in college or high school.

Blab plays for U.S. coach Bobby Knight at Indiana University. Wennington plays at St. John's. Schrempf and Welp are teammates at Washington. Meagher plays for Duke.

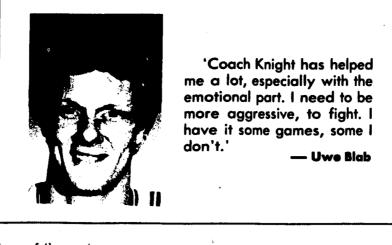

Even Uruguay's Horacio Lopez played for a couple of American universities, staying in the USA just long enough each time to get through the basketball season.

And Jasmina Perazic, leading scorer on the Yugoslavian women's team, played four years at the University of Maryland.

There is no one reason why each of the foreign players chose to play in the USA, but, in the end, said Italian Olympic basketball coach Alessandro Gamba, every European who becomes involved with American basketball does so for one purpose: To improve his fundamentals.

"In Italy," says Gamba, a dedicated disciple of Knight's teaching principles, "we have a group of very good coaches, but few teachers. You make a lot of money to coach, after you've been in the business for some time, but teachers make little money."

During the past decade, thousands of Europeans, coaches as well as players, have come to the United States for summer study under the masters of the sport.

"Because of that," says Gamba, "we've seen a big change in the sport, especially behind the Iron Curtain." The Russians and East Germans, of course, are skipping these Olympics, but Yugoslavia is expected to be one of the USA's biggest challengers for the gold medal.

We have sent some high school kids to study on the East Coast," says Gamba. "Last year, we had one 7-foot-3 and another 6- foot-9 at Lutheran High near New York City and another, Mario Baldi, a 6-foot-11 boy from Milan, on the West Coast, just to learn the basics."

Blab insists he and Schrempf came to the United States "just for the fun of it." But his younger brother - also a 7-footer - is following him and will enroll at the University of Illinois this fall. "In Europe, everybody likes to go to a foreign country to learn a language," Blab says. "Since I had only studied English in high school, my only choices were Great Britain or the United States. Basketball certainly was not the first thing I had in mind.'

Like Gamba, Blab has become a Knight disciple.

"I have learned a lot, but I've learned I have a lot of problems, too," says Blab. "Coach Knight has helped me a lot, especially with the emotional part. I need to be more aggressive, to fight. I have it some games, some I don't."

Now the West German government has made it a policy to send young basketball prospects to the United States for schooling.

"It's like a basketball camp," he says. "They pick 10 players every year to send to high school in the states or to college, to get them better educated in basketball.

Wennington, who went to Lutheran High on Long Island, agrees it is impossible to match the fundamentals taught in U.S. schools.

But he came here for a purpose completely different.

"I'd played basketball since I was about 12," he says. "I moved to Long Island after the 10th grade, when my mother moved from Montreal.

Two years of exposure to the better fundamental coaching made Wennington a prize catch for St. John's. "I went through all the same recruiting pressures that Chris did," he says. Chris Mullin, a teammate of Wennington's at St. John's, is a member of the USA team.

Perazic is one of the rare women players to come to America to improve her basketball.

"I lived in Germany and went to an American high school because I wanted to learn English," she says. "My coach said I could play good enough to get a scholarship in the United States. I wanted to see New York and Washington, D.C. The East Coast was closer to Europe, so that's how I chose Maryland.

"In Europe, especially in Yugoslavia, we don't have the opportunity or facilities, because of economics. We just don't have the money."

'King Carl' skips 'Summer Sunday'

©Chicago Tribune

LOS ANGELES - NBC-TV's "Summer Sunday" says it had Carl Lewis lined up for an appearance two days ago, but King Carl jilted the show as surely as he has spurned so many others since he became the Cover Boy of the L.A. Games.

After skipping a meet where the 4x100 relay team was to run a practice race (he said he was resting up) and after critquing the Olympic Village (he said it was crowded, yet good enough for everyone but him), Lewis' absence Sunday was not a surprise and just another example of his swelling arrogance.

Sources at NBC relate the tale this way: Lewis reportedly said he'd do the show and twice promised he'd call a network rep to confirm. After Lewis failed to make both calls, the network rep tries to reach him, continually got a busy signal and had an operator confirm the phone was off the hook. The rep then called Lewis' agent, Joe Douglas, who said you only get interviews through him (the agent) and hung up. The rep called back in an attempt to make peace and had a civilized conversation, but at the end Douglas reiterated Lewis wouldn't appear.

"Summer Sunday" ran a segment with journalists discussing the Games among themselves, but the original plan – Lewis interviewing reporters on how they do their jobs - was left as an idea dashed on the rocks of egos run rampant.

Rumors, runners rampant in L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - A drunken man on the University of California at Los Angeles campus tosses a blue rag on the ground. At the University of Southern California, someone throws a pack of cigarettes over a fence.

But by the time Los Angeles Police Department press officers received inquiries from reporters, the dirty blue rag and the pack of cigarettes have become bombs hurled by terrorists at the Olympic Villages.

There are 7,000 journalists in Los Angeles to cover the Olympic Games, and they all want that hot story.

And then there was the report that members of the South Korean team were barbecuing snakes, said LAOOC spokesman Richard Levin. Snacks. Not snakes

And the British equestrian team, it was said, was bringing gas masks for its horses to combat the Los Angeles smog. The team, as it turned out, does have special oxygen masks for the horses, for use during high-altitude transcontinental flights. But not for smog.

But by far the biggest rumor is that of a terrorist attack, usually in the form of someone breaching the security at one of the Olympic Villages and tossing a bomb.

The bombs that don't exist have been in briefcases or strange brown boxes. Or they transform in middair, like the pack of cigarettes or the blue rag. "I got a call at home Monday night from a TV news director who said a very reliable source had told him that we had arrested a man with a briefcase full of explosives in the Olympic Village," said one police official. "Nothing to it."

One reporter was sure that police had arrested a man who threw an explosive device into one of the Olympic villages. That was the pack of cigarettes.

"I recently got a call from a newspaper reporter that they had information that police in West Los Angeles had chased a man with a brown box, and lost the man but recovered the box with 50 pounds of plastic explosives," said another official.

"It turns out that we just saw a guy with a funny brown box and we checked it. Nothing to it."

Lt. Dan Cooke of the LAPD said one of his favorites was the case of the blue rag bomb.

"A couple of weeks ago, a fellow, a drunk, was over by the business administration building at UCLA and threw a blue shop rag down on the ground," Cooke said. "By the time it got to me in a call from a reporter, he was a terrorist trying to blow up a bus at the 'Olympic venue."

Telephone callers have asked Los Angeles police whether the July 18 massacre of 21 people at a fast-food restaurant in San Ysidro, 120 miles south of Los Angeles, had any relation to the Olympics.

Officers were also quick to respond to the more legitimate questions posed Friday night when a car careened down a sidewalk in Westwood, killing a teen-age girl and injuring 54 other pedestrians.

The man arrested in the incident did not mention the Olympics, police said.

"It's like playing the children's game of telephone," said Lt. Myron Wasserman, assigned to the law enforcement command center at the Piper Technical Building near downtown Los Angeles.

"You can hear something one night and by the next day you hear rumors that are completely different. We have one person assigned full time to rumor control."

Darlington girl wins NBA award

NEW YORK (AP) - Jean Ann Bredeson of Darlington, Wis., was one of four high school seniors to receive a National Basketball Association $1,000 college scholarships Monday as part of a program designed to recognize students for academic and extracurricular achievements, regardless of athletic ability.

Kevin W. Davis of Lexington, Ky.; Barry John Jacobson of Edmond, Okla.; and Steve Joffe of Tucson, Ariz., were also selected by a panel of six judges.

"Our four national winners should take special satisfaction in the fact that they were selected in a process that included the review of over 1,000 applications from students who had excellent credentials," said NBA Commissioner David J. Stern.

The national winners were selected from applicants residing outside a 75-mile radius of an NBA arena. In addition, each of the 23 league teams offered a minimum of two $1,000 scholarships to students living within a 75-mile radius.

PITTSBURGH (AP) - The Pittsburgh Steelers traded veteran Steve Courson to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers on Monday in exchange for offensive guard and tackle Ray Snell, a former University of Wisconsin player.

Courson, 28, who's beginning his seventh year in the National Football League, was a fifth-round draft choice from South Carolina in 1977. Ile has been a starter at right guard for the past five seasons, playing 73 career games, including 48 starts, according to team spokesman John Evenson.

SEC signs football pact with WTBS

ATLANTA (AP) - At least 12 Southeastern Conference football games will be televised over cable by Turner Broadcasting System this fall under an agreement announced Monday by officials of the conference and TBS.

The financial details of the agreement were not disclosed, but SEC Commissioner Boyd McWhorter said all revenues will be divided equally betwen the 10 conference schools and the conference.

Bob Wussler, executive vice president of TBS, said the agreement calls for 12 games to be televised on "SuperStation" WTBS on Saturdays beginning Sept. 8, and one or two additional Saturday games may be added if air times and football schedules can be arranged.

calling plays. He's learned to read defenses well for a young guy. That's probably the area we would expect him to be behind. But he has shown he can handle it."

Gregg tried to downplay the move of the rookie ahead of two veteran quarterbacks, but felt the team had to make a decision with the start of preseason games approaching so Wright can get used to plaving.

"If we decide Randy Wright is the second quarterback, he's the guy who has to get the most work," Gregg said.

Gregg said Wright will play close to a half against the Cowboys. The coach said he's not discouraged about the work of Campbell, a former top draft choice.

"I think Rich has done things very very well so I'm not down on him," Gregg said. "I'm not down on David Whitehurst either. It's just a matter of another guy stepping in and putting another number in the equation." Gregg also cut five players from could be any better at this point."

For example, five of Sandberg's home runs have tied the game for the Cubs, and three more have given them the lead. He has had 41 games in which he has gotten two or more hits, and the Cubs have won 34 of them.

"I just feel more comfortable, more relaxed on the field," he said. "I've learned a lot the last couple of years as far as knowing the pitchers. I know what their best pitches are, and when to expect them."

Sandberg came to Cubs from the Phillies in January of 1982 along with shortstop Larry Bowa for shortstop Ivan DeJesus. Guess who looked like the throw-in in that deal?

But General Manager Dallas Green, who had been the manager for the Phillies until he joined the Cubs after the '81 season, had liked Sandberg all along.

So when the '82 season began, Sandberg was the team's third baseman. After a one-for-32 start he finished the season with a solid .271 average.

Gregg must trim it to 49.

Nothing but best effort can make Krumrie happy

Associated Press

Tim Krumrie says there should be no mystery about why he plays hard. The second-year defensive lineman for the Cincinnati Bengals knows there will always be someone there to take his place if he slacks off.

"I came in with the same attitude as I did last year and I'm just as hungry," Krumrie, the former University of Wisconsin athlete, said at the Bengals' training camp at Wilmington, Ohio.

"Nothing is ever handed to you in this league. You have to earn it every day. The minute you start taking something for granted is the minute you get slapped in the face."

Krumrie, the Bengals' 10th-round draft choice in 1983, had to overcome doubts that, at 240 pounds, he might be too small to play pro football. But now playing at 270 pounds and with one National Football League season already behind him, Krumrie is being counted as a probable starter at nose tackle on Cincinnati's defensive line.

"When you put the pads on, you should be ready to play," Krumrie said. "I don't care if it's the first day of training camp or the last day of the season. I don't think I deliberately try to be a fighter, it just seems to happen."

All-pro defensive tackle Randy White has told friends he is giving the Dallas Cowboys until Aug. 25 to offer him a bigger contract.

White has been fishing in East Texas instead of training at camp in Thousand Oaks, Calif.

He reportedly wants his $330,000 salary bumped up to at least $800,000 next season — a salary equal to that of New York Jets defensive end Mark Gastineau.

White's friends say White will come back Aug. 25, the day of the Cowboys' final exhibition game, to play out his option if he doesn't get an acceptable contract offer. They said White, 31, may sign with the United States Football League after his option is up.

Cowboy president Tex Schramm has indicated the team is willing to pay White more than the $550,000-ayear salary of quarterback Danny White but less than Gastineau's $800,000.

NFL notes

White isn't the only all-pro staying away from camp.

Defensive end Howie Long has become the second all-pro star of the Super Bowl champion Los Angeles Raiders to stay away from camp in Santa Rosa, Calif., in a salary dispute. Long, 24, failed to return to camp for Monday's two-a-day sessions. Long joins 1983 all-pro tight end

Todd Christensen, who has yet to report to camp, in deciding absence might make the Raiders' hearts grow fonder and open the team's checkbook.

Before his departure, Long said he was unhappy with a salary which would pay him about one-fifth of the reported $750,000 Gastineau will make this season.

Alex Spanos, a California apartment magnate, will match a Dallas developer's bid and purchase the majority ownership in the San Diego Chargers held by Gene Klein.

The decision by Spanos, a minority partner with a 10 percent interest in the team, ends 18 years of ownership by Klein.

Klein refused to disclose a sale price. Several reports have placed the value of his holdings at $40 million.
