Coleman offers apology to fans

Vince Coleman, who may face criminal prosecution and a civil lawsuit, called his actions "very inappropriate" Thursday and apologized to the family whose 2½-year-old daughter was burned by a powerful firecracker.

Speaking for the first time since the episode outside Dodger Stadium last weekend, the New York Mets outfielder referred to himself as a "loving father" who "would not endanger a child's welfare."

"It was never my intention to bring harm to anyone," he said. Coleman, accompanied by his wife and two children, read a statement at Shea Stadium after a day game in which the Florida Marlins beat the Mets 2-1. It was the third straight game in which he did not play.

A decision on whether to file criminal charges against the 31-year-old player won't be made before Friday, the Los Angeles district attorney's office said.

Coleman, along with teammate Bobby Bonilla, was a passenger in a Jeep driven by the Dodgers' Eric Davis when he allegedly tossed an explosive in a stadium parking lot after Saturday's game. The explosion injured three people.

Attorney Darrell York, representing Derek Santos and his wife, Marivel, and their 2½-year-old daughter, Amanda, said Wednesday a civil suit is planned in the next few weeks.

The Los Angeles Times and The New York Times reported Friday that Coleman will not contest the charges and hopes to make a financial settlement with the Santos family.

Ojeda treating emotional scars

Cleveland pitcher Bob Ojeda is undergoing psychiatric treatment in Baltimore as part of his recovery from a boating accident during spring training that killed two teammates, his agent said.

Ojeda was the only survivor of the March 22 crash that killed fellow pitchers Tim Lincecum and Steve Olin. Ojeda suffered severe head injuries.

"Bobby came to Baltimore right after the accident and visited a doctor," Ojeda's agent, Ron Shapiro, said. "Then he went about the business of healing physically. But he never dealt with the post-traumatic stress syndrome of something like this — 'Why am I alive and everyone else is dead?'"

"This is a monumental emotional thing to deal with," Shapiro said. "The scars on his head can heal. But the scars inside his head will take longer."

Upset Mandarich slams Green Bay

Tony Mandarich, who, for three years, faked the Green Bay Packers into thinking he could play professional football, took a few shots at Green Bay during an interview with a Traverse City, Mich. radio station.

In fact, they were better shots than what Mandarich delivered during a period that started after he left Michigan State as a behemoth offensive tackle and ended when he left Green Bay as an ashen, corpse-like, shell of a man who was the joke of the team.

"If you like a hick town and if you like paper mills, it's great," Mandarich said of Green Bay. "If you like swimming in the slime there in the bay, Green Bay is fine."

Mandarich knows what he's talking about when he speaks of slime.

Former New York Yankees pitcher Whitey Ford shudders at the thought of the team moving to New Jersey. Said Ford:

"The New Jersey Yankees. That doesn't sound right. You can't have the house that Babe built in Secaucus."

Optimistic Packers still raise questions

LUCAS

Five reasons why the Green Bay Packers will be better than 9-7 this season:
1. Reggie White and Bill Maas.

There are only two stars on a football team, according to Los Angeles Raiders' defensive end and philosopher Anthony Smith.

The quarterback. And the quarterback killer. White has been killin' them with regularity and delight. Over the past seven years, he has 111 sacks. During the same time frame, the Packers had 70 from their linemen, collectively.

Blessed with incredible quickness for his bulk, White is the only defensive lineman in NFL history to have more sacks (124) than games played (121).

White will make everyone better around him, including Maas, once a terror, still a threat.

Maas is a mass in the middle. And the former Pro Bowler (1986 and '87) is back where he belongs — at nose guard — after an unsuccessful three-year stint at defensive end with the Chiefs.

In concert with White, who will shift over the center in certain defenses, Maas (115 career starts) will bring much needed strength and savvy to the lineup.

2. Brett Favre and Ken O'Brien.

Joe Kapp with a gun. Not a cap gun, either.

A rifle. Besides a strong arm, Favre exhibited remarkable accuracy for a young quarterback, completing 64 per cent of his passes. Will become the Packers' all-time leader in passing efficiency this season, surpassing Bart Starr.

Because of his inexperience, the offense was pretty vanilla, by design, in 1992. That will change with additional maturity and tutoring under Mike Holmgren, who loves Favre's fire.

This tough son-of-a-gun — who's also the son of a coach — showed his leadership ability while leading the Packers to an 8-5 record as a starter.

As a backup, O'Brien is a huge catch. Few backups in the NFL today can match his resume. Led Jets in passing seven years. And second only to Joe Namath in career 300-yard games with 17.

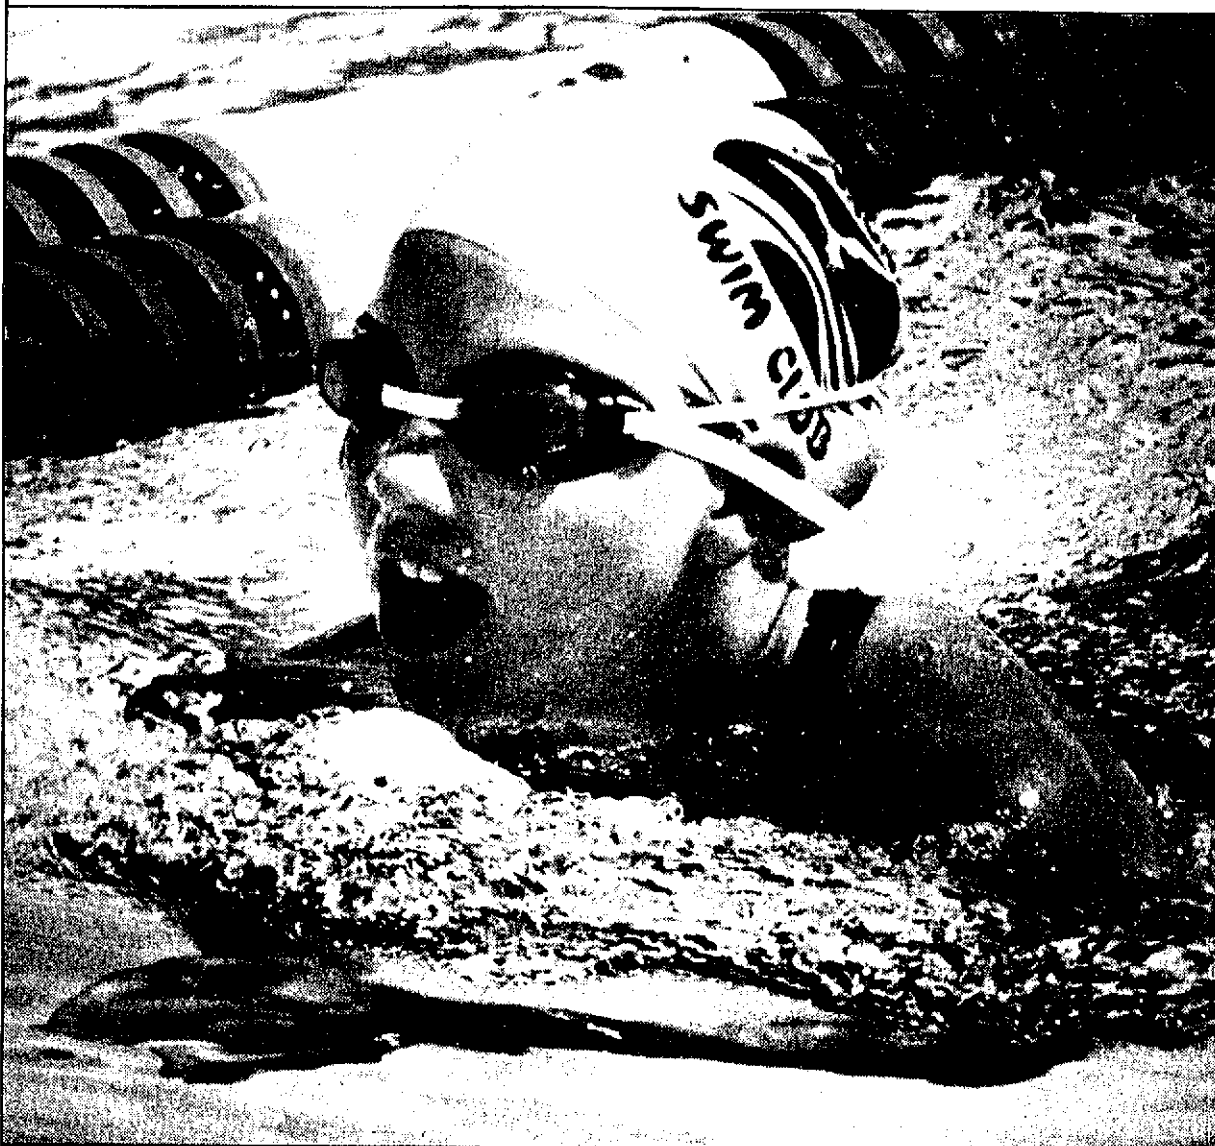

3. Tony Bennett and George Koonce.

This Bennett didn't leave his heart in San Francisco. But he has left his calling card in opposing backfields with 24½ sacks in his last 26 games.

Bennett is drawing comparisons with New Orleans' Rickey

Finally, Brady catches a break

By Howard Thomas

The Capital Times

GREEN BAY — Jeff Brady is used to fighting for every break he gets.

Which explains why he is feeling a bit awkward about his assignment for the Green Bay Packers in Saturday's Hall of Fame game against the Los Angeles Raiders.

Brady

After years of having to constantly prove himself, Brady has simply been handed the starting left outside linebacker job that belonged to first-round draft choice Wayne Simmons until he suffered a knee injury Monday.

It's the first time in a long time Brady can remember being given anything.

From walking on and later starring at the University of Kentucky, to being drafted in the 12th round (323rd pick overall) by the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1991, to carving out his niche as a free agent with the Packers last season, nothing has come easy for the 24-year old Cincinnati native.

That said, you might expect the recent developments to overwhelm Brady. If they have, he certainly isn't letting on.

"Somebody asked me the other day if I was scared going into (the game) Saturday," Brady related after practice Thursday.

"Hell, if I was going to be scared, I would have been scared two years ago coming in (to the NFL) as a 12th-rounder. I'm not scared at all."

Brady may not be scared, but he is staring directly at the biggest opportunity of his career.

Green Bay coach Mike Holmgren plans to alternate Brady and free-agent acquisition Terry Crews — a second-year player from Western Michigan — at the position all but given to Simmons the day he was drafted.

With Simmons not expected to return from Thursday's arthroscopic surgery on his right knee for 4 to 6 weeks, Brady will be given an extended chance to show the Packers what he can do.

"I know I can go out and perform well when given the chance," Brady said.

The 6-foot-1, 235-pounder thought he was well on his way to establishing that fact early last season when he made valuable contributions as a special teams player while being worked into the nickel packages used to defense obvious passing situations.

But Brady's season was interrupted when he was placed on injured reserve with a bad knee in late September.

Yahara Hills kind to Public Links players

By Rob Schultz

The Capital Times

The first round of the City Men's Golf Tournament was a dream for those who represented the Public Links courses.

It was at wide-open Yahara Hills. Winter rules were in effect, even in the rough. It was windy.

Today's second round may be even dreamier because it has been moved from soggy Cherokee Country Club back to Yahara, where winter rules will still be in effect — even in the rough — and the forecast calls for light winds.

"This is like retribution for last year at Blackhawk," said Yahara's Rick Curtin, referring to last year's rain-shortened tournament that included a gut-wrenching first-round cut at the tight Blackhawk Country Club layout.

So maybe, just maybe, somebody from either Yahara or Odana Hills will break the jinx and become the first golfer who doesn't belong to a private club to win this tournament since Jim Schuman did it in 1986. (Mike Murphy won the tournament representing Yahara, but also was a member of Watertown Country Club).

"I hope it's me," said Curtin, who was tied with Odana's Dan Wubbels and Cherokee's Brent Beer for the first-round lead after they shot 3-under par 69s at Yahara's West Course. "I'd like to do something good for once. I've never won the city. I've never won anything decent."

Another Public Links golfer, Toby Upshaw of Yahara, was in fourth place after shooting a 2-under 70 during the first-round that saw many of the threesomes crawl in at an unforgivable five-hour pace.

Nakoma's Dave Grams, who was last week's State Amateur runner-up, Odana's Jim Bakken, Cherokee's Stu Grendahl, Blackhawk's Derek Schnarr and Maple Bluff's Paul Holzem were tied for fifth at 71.

Yahara's Curtin certainly added some color to the tournament, on and off the course. He laughingly referred to himself as possibly the least-popular player in the tournament because he works for the city as an assessor.

"Shhh," he said. "Don't tell anyone what I do."

Curtin sure made some noise during his six-birdie round that included birdies on each of the four par-5s. He walked onto the par-4 17th tee 4-under, but hit a 3-iron into the hay and took double bogey. He came back to birdie the difficult par-4 18th, which tells you that Curtin's mental game is as solid as his swing.

"I'm hitting it really solid right now and I'm thinking about the right things," said Curtin, who missed the cut at last week's State Amateur by three strokes due, in part, to playing Blackhawk's 16th and 17th holes 9 over par. He came back last weekend to finish third in an invitational in Muskegon, Mich.

"I got a good swing going, I found a putting stroke and the ball started falling in," he said.

Equally as pleased was Cherokee's Beer, a two-time winner of this event who found his way into the tournament because all former champs are now exempt from qualifying.

The 59-year-old Beer, who moved back to Madison from Tucson two years ago and was tied for the first-round lead in

Selig: Owners need control

Second of two parts

By Dave Van Dyke

Chicago Sun-Times

Allan H. "Bud" Selig, the president and CEO of the Milwaukee Brewers, has been the caretaker commissioner of baseball since Fay Vincent's resignation last Sept. 7. Selig, 59, has been baseball's most active owner and is liked and respected by fellow owners and the Players Association.

An eternal optimist, Selig has tried to solve baseball's problems since Vincent's departure with numerous committees that involve every owner in the process. Selig will chair a meeting at Kohler, Wis., Aug. 11-12 in which the 28 owners will attempt to iron out their economic differences and draw up a proposal to present to the Players Association at the bargaining table.

Today, Selig discusses baseball's dimming image and failed marketing plan.

Q. How much does baseball miss a commissioner?

A. I'm not sure how to evaluate that. Does baseball need a strong commissioner? Of course, it does. There isn't any question about that and, in fact, as somebody who's been raised in a commissioner system the last 24 years, I feel very deeply about that.

On the other hand, let me be candid with you. I think the last 10 months have been really useful. We have examined every phase of our business. There has been a lot of searing criticism of baseball and when you think back, all the problems that have developed over the many years all happened under so-called strong commissioners.

This idea that a commissioner is some omnipotent power and can force clubs to do X and Y, that's crazy. That doesn't happen in anything else in life. On the other hand, we need a strong commissioner

Today's honoree, Walter Payton, was the sweetest running back of them all.

Payton's sweet run endures

CHICAGO — Walter Payton not only ran to daylight better than any back in professional football history. He slipped through the seams of time, too, without anybody laying a hand on him.

The man they call "Sweetness" performed after the age of innocence in sports, when the games were fun, as were the players whose labor was also their love. By the late 1970s, when Payton began to pile up miles for the Chicago Bears, the athletic vocabulary had been revised to include modern terms such as free agency.

Yet Payton did his best works of art before the onset of overkill, as we now know it, had fully taken hold. Leagues and teams were just learning how to lavish lifetime contracts on third-stringers who produced one good month. And fans as well as media were content to be less frantic, too, about scores, highlights and how many more pedestals to erect for instant heroes.

How else to explain events of the first Sunday of October in 1984 than to suggest we all took this genius of geniuses for granted? Payton collected 154 rushing yards that afternoon against New Orleans to shatter Jim Brown's National Football League career mark, yet only 53,752 spectators came to Soldier Field, about 12,000 short of capacity. You knew Sweetness would do it. You always did, and therein lies his story.

"The stadium wasn't full?" Payton said. "I wouldn't have known that if you hadn't told me. Weren't the Cubs playing a big game that day?"

They were, indeed, playing the fateful fifth and deciding game of their National League Championship Series at San Diego. But by the time the Cubs blew the assignment, the Bears had showered and been long gone after their noon kickoff. Still, some fans stayed home to switch channels because the outcome on Sweetness wasn't in doubt. It never was, and that was the only catch to his greatness.

Payton's maximum salary was $1.1 million per annum, a price that would be disregarded in the current market on grounds of a misplaced decimal point. He ran the infamous hill near his suburban home without network TV coverage, and selling himself and his cherished privacy to the highest bidder wasn't part of Payton's agenda. Going to war was, even though the Bears lost so many battles. He made them worth watching even when they didn't deserve our undivided attention, even when every foe realized containing him was the only defense required for victory.

Payton didn't get the touchdown call at Super Bowl XX. But even that, though unfortunate, was symbolic. He inspired teammates and coaches by being a superstar insistent on being treated as a regular guy, a warm and decent sort who was never too busy to initiate locker room mischief or a friendship. He strutted his stuff only when the Bears needed a first down, yet when it came time to give him the key to the city in a romp at New Orleans, we changed the locks.

"Yeah, I was a free agent at one time, too," Payton said. "But who telephoned me? You. You didn't own a team and still don't."

He was tough to pin down, but he's given his word. He will be at the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, today for induction. We always knew he'd be there, too.

Harris makes his move

By Kent Youngblood
Sports reporter

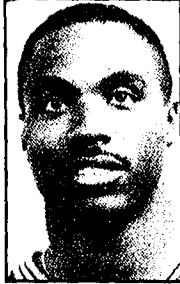

GREEN BAY — Corey Harris started hearing it from Ray Rhodes last season:

Come on over, Corey. This is where you belong, Corey.

Join us, Corey.

"He was bringing that," Harris said

the other day, after another training camp practice had brought another fast-forward lesson in Harris' brave new world as a National Football League cornerback. "He'd say, 'Hey, you need to be on this side.'"

Harris

Football League cornerback. "He'd say, 'Hey, you need to be on this side.'"

Rhodes, the Green Bay Packers' defensive coordinator, came to that conclusion last season after Harris, a rookie receiver claimed on waivers from Houston in October, began kicking butt and taking names on special teams.

The velocity with which Harris approached the game. "Full speed," Rhodes said. "All the time."

The abandon Harris showed getting his 5-foot-11, 195-pound body to a hit. The ferocity he showed making the hit. The joy he showed afterward. "He's determined to be there when the ball arrives," Rhodes said.

Harris needed a position commensurate with his agility and toughness.

Packers to open exhibition season today

■ What: The Green Bay Packers, entering their 75th season in professional football, will play the Los Angeles Raiders in the Hall of Fame game.

■ When: Today at 2 p.m. (Madison time) at Fawcett Stadium in Canton, Ohio.

■ Broadcasts: Radio — Packers Radio Network (WTSO, 1070 AM) with Jim Irwin and Max McGee. Television — ABC (WKOW, Ch. 27) with Al Michaels, Frank Gifford and Dan Dierdorf.

■ History: This will be the third appearance for the Packers in the Hall of Fame game and their first since 1980. That year, on Aug. 2, the game was called with 5 minutes, 29 seconds left in the fourth quarter — with the Packers and the San Diego Chargers tied, 0-0 — because of an electrical storm. The Packers beat the Atlanta Falcons, 38-24, in 1969.

The Packers have played the Raiders only once in the exhibition season.

In 1982, the host Raiders won, 24-3.

■ Last season: The Packers finished 9-7, in second place in the National Football Conference Central Division and one victory away from the playoffs. The Raiders (7-9) finished fourth in the American Football Conference West Division.

■ Overview: Packers coach Mike Holmgren's first goal? Winning, of course. But analyzing the talent — especially the young talent — is just as important. "We'd certainly like to win," he said. "But we want to evaluate our team. That will never change. I will not, for example, re-insert Brett Favre or Sterling (Sharpe) or Reggie (White)."

The plan? Holmgren said he would like to play each of his quarterbacks. He said Favre would start and play the first quarter. Ken O'Brien would play the second quarter and into the third. Ty Detmer will follow and, if there is time, rookie Mark Brunell might play. "We have a plan on how we'll play our people," Holmgren said. "And we'll stick to that plan."

Holmgren said White, the much-heralded defensive end, would probably play the first quarter.

State Journal wire services

NEW YORK — The pitch was about a foot outside and a foot off the ground. It was ball four. But Mike Stanley saw something that he liked about the fastball. He swung, the ball zoomed off his bat and then barely dipped over the 9-foot right-field fence.

It was a three-run home run in a six-run fourth inning in which Stanley's massive bat continued to unleash magic. It was an inning in which the Yankees crushed Cal Eldred and in which the best offense in the major leagues helped catapult them to an 8-4 victory over Milwaukee and into a first-place tie with the losing Toronto Blue Jays in the American League East.

It was an inning in which a 3-0 deficit vanished after Danny Tartabull homered to left-center and then two batters later Stanley followed with his three-run shot to the opposite field.

"I have a sneaky suspicion that was a good pitch that he hit out," manager Buck Showalter said. "Mike has been doing a lot this year. We're beginning to start to expect it from him."

Eldred labored through the fourth inning, throwing 47 pitches. "I just didn't have it tonight," the right-hander said. "We had a lead and I gave it up."

Maybe Stanley's unbelievable hitting and New York's amazing success ratio at Yankee Stadium should no longer be deemed surprises. Maybe this is normal for 1993. Stanley now has 18 home runs in 83 games after hitting just 24 in his first 520 career games. The Yankees have now won 23 of their last 28 games in the Bronx.

Since the Yankees rapped Eldred (11-11) for six runs, Scott Kamieniecki (6-3) was given enough of an offensive cushion to help him overcome an erratic start that saw him get clipped for two runs in the first and another in the third, on Darryl Hamilton's home run.

It then looked as if Kamieniecki would sail to the victory, but he crumbled in the seventh as the Brewers laced him for four straight singles to chop their deficit to 8-4.

But with the bases loaded, Kamieniecki induced Pat Listach to ground into a controversial pitcher-to-catcher-to-first double play. On the relay throw to first, Listach was called out for interference by umpire Dale Ford. The Brewers argued the call and first base coach Tim Foli was ejected and may be suspended or fined for bumping Ford.

Steve Howe then replaced Kamieniecki to retire B.J. Surhoff to end the rally.

Curtin, Holzem in front at Madison's midpoint

By Andrew Cohen
Sports reporter

Familiarity breeds contempt? Finding two people who disagree required no more than a gaze atop the Madison Men's Golf Tournament leader board Friday at Yahara Hills.

Rick Curtin, who plays there regularly, occupies one-half of the top spot. Paul Holzem, who gets to play his own Maple Bluff course this morning, occupies the other. Both are at 1-under-par 141 after shooting second-round scores of 72 and 70, respectively, on Yahara Hills' East course.

"Having the first two days here was absolutely a huge plus for me," said Curtin, 31, who fired an opening-round 69 Thursday on the West course.

"I was real happy that we didn't have to play at Cherokee (because of poor conditions resulting from recent rain). This is the my best possible rotation. Here for two rounds and then Maple Bluff and Blackhawk, the two country club courses I play the most, I couldn't ask for better."

Holzem couldn't ask for better consistency. The 42-year-old account executive hit 17 of 18 greens on Thursday and 16 of 18 Friday, launching his driver straight and long throughout the afternoon.

After recording birdies on the 13th and 14th holes, Holzem bogeyed 17 but quickly recovered with a birdie on 18 to put him in a dead heat with Curtin.

"I had a very consistent round and that's what I'm really striving for," Holzem said. "I'd rather shoot nine-hole rounds of 36 than be up and down and all over the place. Now I'll play the course I know the best and that should help. You know where things are and how to get out of trouble."

Familiarity bred little contempt in Scott Schwendemann, who shot a blistering 68 — the best round of the tournament thus far — to move just a stroke behind Curtin and Holzem.

Schwendemann, 42, fired a 68 during a practice round at the East course Tuesday. On Friday, he birdied eight holes, including an impressive streak from 12 through 15.

"The putts were just dropping all day," said Schwendemann, who has not finished among the top 30 in three previous city tournaments. "I really rode the coattails of Tom Steinhauer today. He shot a 70 and I think we were definitely motivating each other."

Schwendemann's scorching round has him tied for second with Brent Beer at 142. After sharing the first-round lead with Curtin and Dan Wubbels, Beer appeared to be mudsliding out of contention with a double-bogey and two bogeys over the first four holes.

Undaunted, the city tournament champion in 1966 and 1978 made only one bogey the rest of the way and closed out his round of 73 with a birdie on 18.

Stu Grendahl (143), Tobin Upshaw (144), Steinhauer (145) and Wisconsin State amateur runner-up Dave Grams (145) are within close range of the leaders. Wubbels, who missed a pair of 2-foot putts and struggled to a 77, joined University of Wisconsin golfer Joe Ring, Rick Kelly and Tom Huest at 146.

A total of 49 golfers made the cut of 152 and, remarkably, no less than 12 competitors slid into the final two rounds with that exact score.

"Now you've got to shift gears and start playing a totally different game," said Curtin, who made the cut for the first time in three tries.

Holzem agreed: "It's like two separate tournaments. We're now into tougher courses with parts that can kill you. I'd be surprised if there weren't a lot of changes over the next two days."

Skolaski takes a careful attitude into finals

By Eric Anderson
Sports reporter

Leave it to the younger generation to keep things in perspective. Friday's second day of preliminary qualifying at the 1993 All-City Swim Meet at High Point Pool featured competitors of age 10 and younger. And they sparkled just as much as their older (and faster) teammates did Thursday.

Leading the pack of qualifiers for today's finals was a 10-year-old with a familiar name in the city swimming circles.

Nakoma's Jennifer Skolaski, who is following in her three sisters' footsteps, advanced in both races she entered, leading the qualifiers in both.

This meet serves as a warmup for Skolaski, who will strut her stuff next weekend at the Midwest Zone C Meet in Wichita, Kan.

"I think it's going to be really fun," she said of the meet, which she qualified for with nationally ranked times for her age group.

SWIMMING

But first, Skolaski will swim for two city titles today in the 50-meter freestyle and the 100 individual medley. She will do it with a careful style and a sense of perspective.

"When she (gets disqualified), she just laughs," Nakoma coach Pam Roth said of Skolaski. "It's hard to really push her, because it never seems like she's serious."

And that kind of attitude, along with an enormous amount of talent, has pushed Skolaski not only to practice with her peers, but with the older swimmers at Nakoma.

"When I practice with the older kids, I push myself," she said. "I want to try to keep up with them."

Nine-year-old Jane Evans of West Side also qualified for two finals. Her attitude's similar to Skolaski's.

"I really wanted to get the best times and records," she said. "But I really wanted to relax and have fun."

The 9-10 year division saw three other dual qualifying winners: Parkcrest's Jackie Flint (50 breaststroke and 50 butterfly), Monona's Ehren Keith (100 individual medley and 50 breaststroke) and Paul Brehm of Ridgewood (50 breaststroke and 50 butterfly).

Brehm set the only record of the day, topping the previous mark in the 50 breaststroke by .20 seconds.

In the 8-and-under divisions, both the boys and girls brackets had multiple swimmers move on to the finals.

For the girls, Ellen Preston of Cherokee, Maple Bluff's Margaret Barry, Crissy Hoover of West Side, Shorewood's Ashley Vandell, Parkcrest's Kerri Priest and Katherine Marshall of Ridgeway each qualified for two finals.

On the boys side, Tim Dykstra and Matthew Rehbohl of Parkcrest, Joel Coyne of Monona and Middleton's Jason Vadney and Nolan Johnson each will be competing in two finals.

But at that age, the emphasis is on fun.

"Our main goal is have (the kids) have a lot of fun and work on their strokes," Roth said. "A lot of the time kids will work hard without even knowing they're doing it."

What about those special swimmers, the ones with all the potential and talent? Where is the line between fun and competition?

"Usually around nine, some kids will go out and swim year-round, or with the older kids," Roth said. "We still try to keep them focused on fun, but they'll sprint through practice and not even think about it (being hard work)."

Skolaski seems to have gotten the message.

"Records and winning are nice," she said. "But I'm here to have fun."

Opening ceremonies for today's finals start at 8:30 a.m. Events are scheduled to begin at 9 a.m.

Reporters play role for coaches

We have all been told we are replaceable. I have never doubted it. I always figured the day would come when the boss could call me and say they were going to get someone else to sit in this chair and listen to readers say they want more ultimate Frisbee results. But I must say the news out of Monroe City, Mo., by way of the August issue of Harper's Magazine, was a bit startling. It seems The Monroe City News, which hasn't won a lot of awards for investigative journalism, has come up with a computer program called Zybraic SportsWriter for Football as a way to produce sports articles without any human writing or editing.

COMMENTARY

BILL BROPHY

This undoubtedly comes as good news to the coach of the Monroe City High Panthers, who won't have to put up with the slings and arrows that go with running an unsuccessful sweep on third-and-2. It's unlikely the computer program has a microchip for

Monday Morning Quarterbacks, but it reportedly has something for a lot of other things.

The newspaper sent a questionnaire to the high school coach and asked him to fill in the blanks after each game ranking the opponent as clearly inferior, roughly equal or clearly superior. The questionnaire also asks the coach to assess his team's performance, describe the game-winning play and a dominating individual performance, attach a special significance to the game and give basic information on the weather, opponent's name, score and game location.

According to Harper's, the computer does the rest, spitting out a cliché-filled report on the Panthers' latest conquest or heart-wrenching defeat.

There are many big-time coaches outside of Monroe City who hope this program catches on.

Locally, Don Morton always thought the reports from the ink-stained local wretches — not the veer offense — was a reason people were staying away from University of Wisconsin football games in droves. Barry Alvarez has threatened to close practice, and did so last year as an unspoken and subtle way of telling the locals what he thought of their coverage.

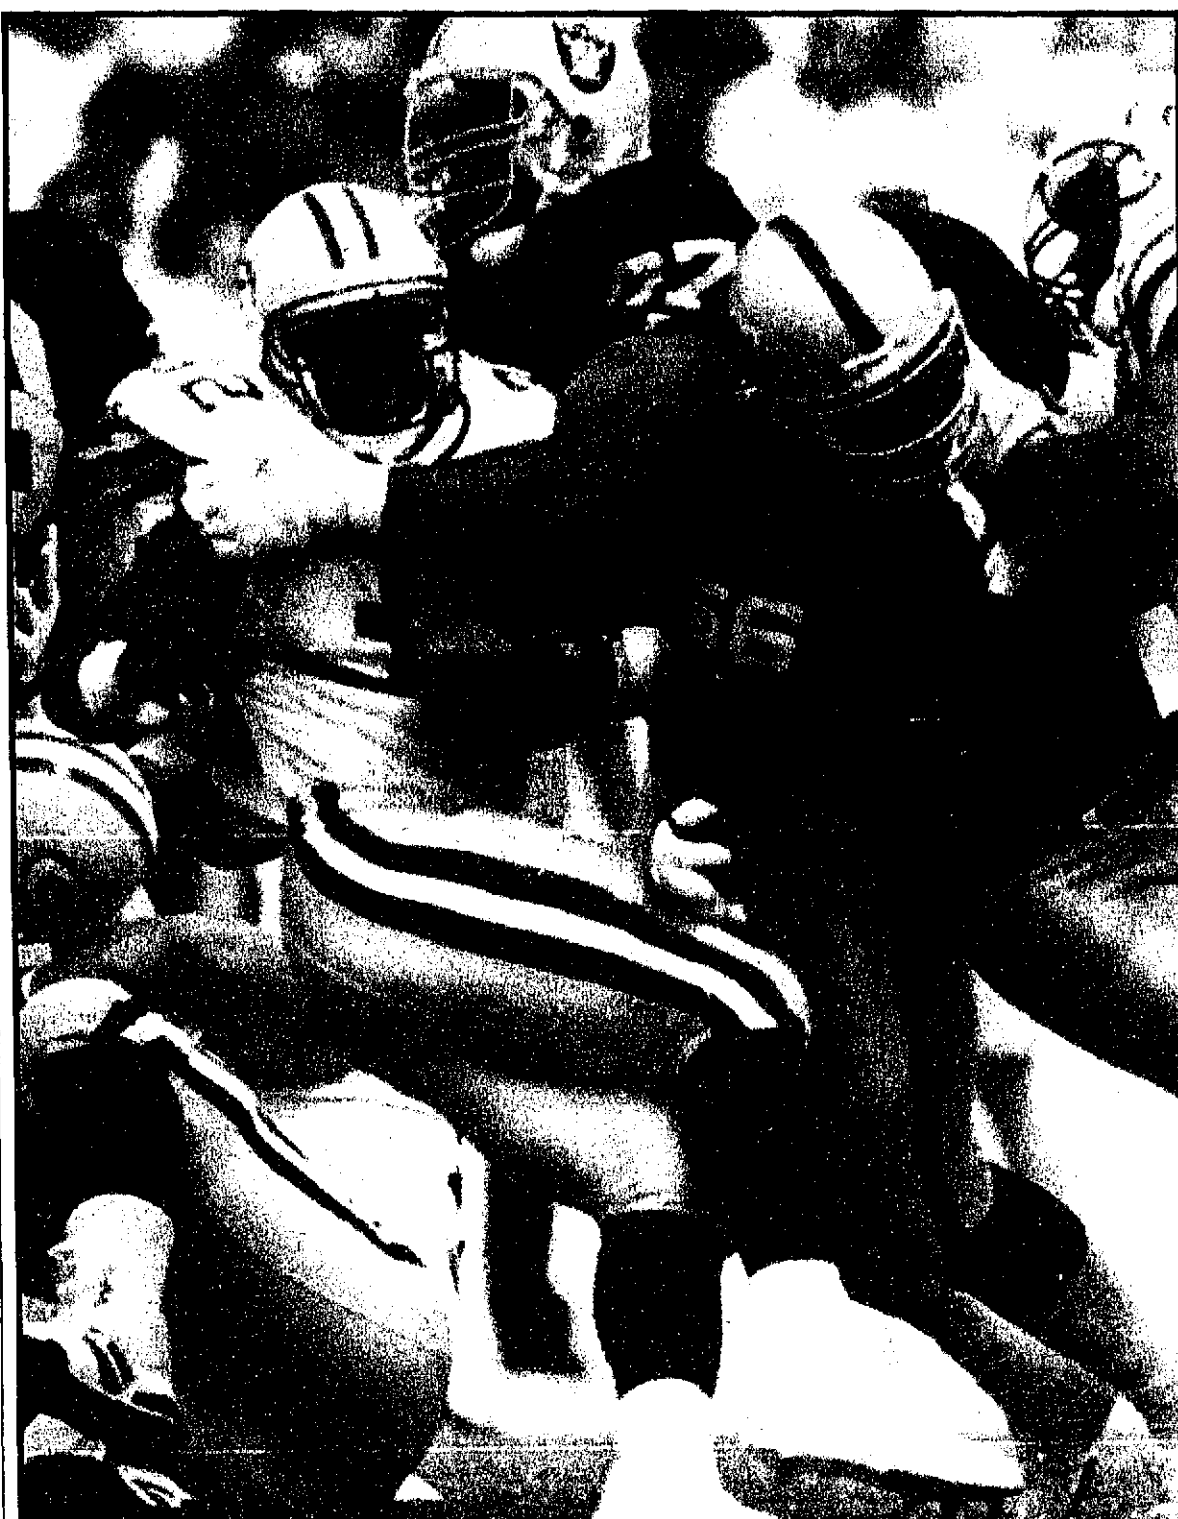

Nationally, however, things are worse. The only thing Indiana basketball coach Bobby Knight dislikes more than a zone defense is the media. And other coaches have talked about how they hope if they need a brain transplant they could get a sports writer's brain because it hasn't been used.

This news of a computer replacing sports writers comes in a bad week for sports scribes, some of whom fought with that great bunch of guys from the New York Mets. First, the media was blamed for causing trouble when it reported that Mets outfielder Vince Coleman threw a firecracker from the Dodgers' Eric Davis' car last weekend in Los Angeles and struck some fans. Hearing this whining, one California columnist suggested that whenever he sees Davis go 0-for-5, he'll expect him to issue a statement saying that media reports of his performance were misleading and inaccurate and he really went 5-for-5.

Then a few days later, Coleman's teammate, Bret Saberhagen, squirted bleach at a reporter in the clubhouse. This is the same pitcher who threw a firecracker at the media earlier in the year, showing he is at least consistent in immature pranks if not at putting together successful back-to-back years of pitching.

But despite all the grumbling from athletes and coaches, sports writers would be missed if this computer program caught on and bottom-line corporate types eliminated all notebook carriers.

You know why? Because without sports writers, some coaches and players would have no one to blame for their failure and they would be forced to look in the mirror.

Packers start slow

By Rusty Miller

CANTON, Ohio — Vince Evans, even at age 38, isn't ready to concede the starting quarterback job of the Los Angeles Raiders.

Evans came on in relief of starter Jeff Hostetler to pass for two second-half touchdowns Saturday as the Raiders beat the Green Bay Packers, 19-3, Saturday in the National Football League's annual Hall of Fame exhibition game.

"I don't play the game lackluster," Evans said. "Whether I'm No. 1 or No. 4 on the depth chart, when I get called on to play, I'm going to give you all I've got."

Evans, who took over at the start of the third quarter, completed seven of 11 passes for 85 yards.

Hostetler, who was picked as the first-string quarterback after signing a free-agent contract with the Raiders in the off-season, was 8-of-13 for 43 yards and one touchdown.

The only scoring the Packers got came on a field goal by former University of Wisconsin kicker Rich Thompson in the fourth quarter. Thompson, who was an all-Big Ten Conference selection in 1992 after making 22 of 32 field-goal attempts, connected from 49 yards out against the Raiders.

Beer takes command at tourney

By David Lubach
Sports reporter

The changing of his putting grip may have meant a change in fortune for Brent Beer.

Using a cross-handed style, Beer needed only 26 putts Saturday at Maple Bluff in firing an even-par 71 to top the leader board at even-par 213 and take a commanding 4-stroke lead after the third round of the Madison

Men's Golf Tournament.

"It was getting to the point where an 18-inch putt was getting to be an adventure," the two-time city champ said. "I changed my style right before the State Am (two weeks ago) and made only five 3-putts over the four days."

Beer made consecutive birdies at holes 16 and 17 to take command of the tournament.

At the par-4 16th, he sank an uphill 12-foot putt which broke from left to right, and at the par-4 17th he sank an 18-foot uphill putt which put him at even-par for the tournament.

Beer recently played in the 1993 State Amateur at Blackhawk Country Club and at a senior best-ball event at Tuckaway — both known for slick greens. He said he loved Maple Bluff's greens.

"I love fast greens," Beer said.

"The greens here are so quick that you just hope to get close, because if you hit the ball hard and don't make it, then you have a real problem."

Beer's two partners in the final round today at Blackhawk will be Paul Holzern and Tobin Upshaw, both 4 shots back at 217 after shooting 76 and 73, respectively.

Next are Rick Curtin, who shared the second-round lead with Holzern, and Jeff Hosking at 219. Scott Schwendemann is alone at 220 after shooting a 78. Hosking's 72 was the second-lowest round Saturday, while Curtin slumped to 78.

The second-round co-leaders struggled on the 6,400-yard layout. Holzern, playing on his home course, missed consecutive short

Owen, Yankees catch Brewers

State Journal wire services

NEW YORK — General manager Gene Michael spent Saturday afternoon's New York Yankees-Milwaukee Brewers game on the telephone shopping for another starting pitcher for his pennant-contending club. It was his bullpen though, which blew a lead in the eighth inning, that must have had him worried.

Mike Gallego's single in the bottom of the ninth drove in Spike Owen from third base, giving the Yankees a 5-4 American League victory over Milwaukee at Yankee Stadium. Owen, recently relieved of his everyday duties at shortstop, mainly because of his .240 average, tripled to lead off, then sat at third as Pat Kelly walked,

Pros keep homosexuality secretive

By Barry Meisel
New York Daily News

David Kopay is tired of being the poster boy for "Gays in Sports." Tired of wearing the label "the gay pro football player." Tired of peering into the same closet from which he emerged nearly 18 years ago and still seeing homosexual or bisexual athletes unwilling to go public.

Dave Pallone is disgusted with Major League Baseball, which he says fired him as a National League umpire in 1988 because he is gay. Disgusted with the world of professional sports, which he says exhibits blatant homophobia in today's society by pretending homosexuality in sports doesn't exist.

Martina Navratilova is thankful

she is one of the world's best tennis players, thankful that being out as a lesbian for 13 years has only cost her publicity and endorsements.

"I've never been thrown out of a restaurant for it," said Navratilova, the only North American athlete to publicly acknowledge his or her homosexuality while still competing. "I've never been assaulted physically or verbally because of it. I didn't lose my job. Yes, indeed, I've been lucky because of the celebrity my tennis affords me."

Gay rights and heightened awareness have become significant social themes for America in the '90s and part of the fabric of daily life. President Clinton offered a compromise plan last week for easing the ban on homosexuals in the military. Two weeks ago, researchers at the National Cancer Institute published a study that concluded sexual orientation is influenced by genetic makeup.

New York City will host Gay Games IV June 18-25, 1994. And three days later, the nation's gay community will celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Stonewall Riots, the uprising on Christopher Street in Greenwich Village that spawned the modern gay movement.

Yet, pro sports perpetuate what psychologist Steven R. Heyman calls "a conspiracy of silence." Heyman, of the University of Wyoming, will chair an American Psychiatric Association symposium on homophobia in sports in August at Toronto.

"Homosexuality in sports is the last great taboo," said Leigh Steinberg, a prominent player agent.

In a wide-ranging two-month investigation, the Daily News examined why pro sports has resisted recognition of homosexuals, conducting more than 120 interviews with about 70 players, coaches, managers, league and team executives, players' association directors, team and private counselors, agents, psychologists, openly gay athletes and gay activists.

Focusing primarily on the four major sports for men (baseball, football, basketball and hockey), the inquiry found that society's myths about machismo, its intolerance of homosexuals, and the multibillion-dollar machine pro sports has become have contributed to keeping

Henderson to Toronto

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Rickey Henderson, baseball's all-time stolen base leader who has been disgruntled over his four-year, $12 million contract signed in 1990, gave grudging approval to the Oakland Athletics of a trade to the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday night.

The trade, reportedly nixed by Henderson earlier in the day, was contingent on his approval because of a no-trade clause in his contract, according to A's spokesman Jay Alves. Story/3E.
